In the light of the coronavirus pandemic, the Federal Court of Justice in Germany will refrain from releasing three documents from three Chinese nationals arrested in the country last summer. In July, Berlin filed a request for the deportation of three Chinese nationals and two Chinese companies, InterBio AG and China Life Science International Ltd. (CLLC), to Germany. According to a statement, the Federal Court has now made a decision that the requested measures should be blocked for the time being. The Chinese nationals and the two Chinese companies had been involved in research on coronavirus and had allegedly committed crimes in the German country. However, the Federal Court of Justice found that the deportation of the Chinese nationals would not help alleviate the situation, as it would be difficult to determine which of them have been involved in the research. Moreover, it would also be problematic if the Chinese authorities should request German assistance for the arrest of the participants in the study, or take the participants to China. The Federal Court considers that the case of the Chinese nationals “could have an undue influence on the peace and security of the Federal Republic of Germany”. The German government requested that the deportation would not be in accordance with international law, as there were no guarantees that the detainees would be released, and the others would not be subject to persecution. Moreover, the deportation would negatively impact
