Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a method and apparatus for non-contact detection of high density surface defects such as pits, scratches, and the like, and more particularly to a method and apparatus for non-contact detection of high density surface defects such as pits, scratches, and the like by utilizing the interference generated when a laser beam reflected on a measurement subject surface and a reference beam having been reflected by a reference surface are superposed. 2. Description of the Related Art Conventionally, when high density surface defects such as pits, scratches, and the like are detected, the surface of a sample to be detected is required to be cleaned as a measure against the effects of contamination from the outside. A method for cleaning the surface of a sample to be detected is known in which a laser beam is irradiated onto the surface of a sample to be detected to detect a reflected laser beam by utilizing an interference from a generated signal with respect to a reference beam. For example, Japanese Patent Application Laid-Open No. 4-307717 proposes a method and an apparatus for detecting pits or the like in a surface of a surface to be detected in which a laser beam is irradiated onto the surface of a sample to be detected and in which the surface of the sample to be detected is scanned by a light beam emitted from a rotating disc to detect a reflected laser beam by utilizing an interference from a generated signal with respect to a reference beam having been reflected by a reference surface. FIG. 8 is a diagram illustrating a conventional apparatus for non-contact detection of high density surface defects by utilizing an interference from a generated signal with respect to a reference beam. Referring to FIG. 8, a laser beam is irradiated onto a surface to be detected 102a of a sample to be detected 102 by way of an objective lens 101 and an aperture 104 as a measure against the effects of contamination from the outside. A reflected laser beam from the surface to be detected 102a is detected by way of the objective lens 101 and the aperture 104 as a result of that the surface of the sample to be detected 102a is scanned by a light beam emitted from a rotating disc 103. A laser beam is irradiated onto a reference surface 104a of a reference mirror 103a by way of the objective lens 101 and an aperture 104a. The laser beam from the reference surface 104a of the reference mirror 103a is reflected by the surface to be detected 102a and is led to an optical detector 105. The optical detector 105 detects a reflected laser beam by way of the objective lens 101 and the aperture
